I don't know if they went back for more lessons, or how they learned to dip and twirl and slide together, though I once saw my father spin my mother completely around—her skirt flaring out around her like the bell of a silk lamp shade—just months before she died. It's their story after all, the one with a secret hidden deep inside it like all love stories—bigger than we are or will ever be—music from a Big Band coming up in the background, playing "You'd Be So Nice to Come Home To," while our parents swoop and glide in the spotlight, keeping back just enough of the story to make us wonder.

Alison Townsend, from "My Parents' Dance Lessons, 1945"
